HISTORY OF THE SPORT

Polo, one of the oldest equestrian sports in the world –also referred to as “The Game of Kings”– is full of thrills, teamwork, technique, and true sportsmanship.

Polo originated for both sport and training, allowing nomadic warriors in Central Asia to practice their skills on horseback. As the nomads traveled, so too did the game, eventually reaching India and the West.

It was in India that British officers learned about the game and formed the Silchar Polo Club in 1859, leading to the birth of modern polo. The game arrived in the U.S. thanks to James Gordon Bennett, Jr., publisher of the New York Herald, after viewing a match on a trip to England circa 1876. The first game on American soil occurred shortly after at a field in Westchester County, and its popularity quickly spread—leading eventually to the creation of the USPA in 1890.

The USPA quickly established regulations such as standard time periods, pony heights, and equipment rules, in addition to organizing and overseeing matches, tournaments, and other official events. Currently, the headquarters is located in Wellington, Florida.
